

ANATOMY OF THE
MAINE GRAY FOX

(Urocyon Cinereoargenteus)

Grayish coat, with reddish-brown fur on the legs & neck, and run from its ears all the way down its back to its long fluffy tail.

Long pointed ears and a pointed nose

White along the neck and the sides of the face too!

A streak of black runs along on the top down to the tip of the tail.

They are known for being excellent tree climbers, with retractable claws, which is a trait unique among North American canids. They use their climbing skills to hunt and escape predators, and sometimes even make their dens in trees.
